BREAK THE SILENCE ON DOMESTIC VIOLENCE
Tips to help a friend #1 Look out for signs your friend has been a victim of abuse. Are they:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Losing interest in activities they used to enjoy?</li> <li>• Overly worried about what their partner thinks or seem anxious around them?</li> <li>• Concerned their partner may get angry about something they might say or do?</li> <li>• Making excuses for their partner all the time?</li> <li>• Avoiding friends and social activities that don't involve their partner?</li> <li>• Joking about their partner's violent outbursts?</li> <li>• Showing unexplained injuries and offering unlikely explanations?</li> </ul>
Tips to help a friend #2 The Approach If you think a friend is remaining quiet about experiencing abuse, ask them if they need support. Remember:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Go somewhere private where others, especially their partner, won't hear.</li> <li>• Keep your initial approach general, such as, "I'm worried about you because you seem unhappy...."</li> <li>• Don't push them into talking if they aren't comfortable.</li> <li>• Expect your friend to be somewhat defensive-they might not be ready to talk yet.</li> <li>• Let them know you are there for support.</li> </ul>
Tips to help a friend #3 Listen and Believe	Listen. Hear what they say and try not to interrupt. Let your friend talk at their own pace. Show them you are listening by making eye contact and nodding. Don't worry if they stop talking for a while-silences are okay. Believe. Try not to over-do the questions. It can make it seem like you're doubting the story. It's important that your friend sees you're on their side and you support them.
Tips to help a friend #4 Ask. SHHH.	Ask. If you feel a bit helpless, ask your friend what sort of help they'd like from you. They're not expecting you to solve the problem, and you've already done heaps just by listening. Asking will help your friend think about what to do next. Shhh. It's important that your friend keeps trusting you and feels like they're in control of the story. If you think someone else needs to know, tell your friend first. Together you can think about who can be trusted, but don't tell anyone until your friend is okay with it.
Tips to help a friend #5 Validate, don't blame	Validate. Tell your friend what they're feeling is right. Let them know you think their feelings are real by repeating feeling words such as "It's okay you feel scared". Acknowledge you have feelings about it too, but try to keep the focus on your friend. Don't blame: In our society, it's pretty common for victims to be blamed for assault. Try to avoid questions like "Why did you go there?" and "Why did you go out with them?" This can make your friend think they are responsible for what happened.
Tips to help a friend #6 Get Help	Talk with your friend about what would help stop the abuse (if it is still happening), or how they want you to help. Encourage your friend to seek support. Every state has centres that can provide free, confidential and specialist counselling and information for survivors and their family and friends. They may also assist with medical, legal or other issues. Visit the website for contact details - www.stopviolence.com.au
Stop Abuse	Types of abuse: Relationship abuse is not just about physical violence and not always in a domestic or family environment. There are many other subtle forms of abuse which don't have telltale physical or visible signs and can take place between strangers, friends, lovers or even family members. Be on the lookout for these very damaging forms of abuse a friend might be experiencing: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Social abuse</li> <li>• Emotional Abuse</li> <li>• Sexual abuse</li> </ul>
Social Abuse	Is your friend's partner acting like a control freak? Here are some of the warning signs your friend might be experiencing a subtle and often undetected form of abuse. Their partner might be: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Reading their SMS before they do</li> <li>• Monitoring their online activity including accessing private Facebook, or Email accounts</li> <li>• Discouraging them from spending time with certain friends</li> <li>• Taking or managing their income</li> <li>• Scrutinising their spending.</li> </ul>
Emotional Abuse	If your friend's partner always puts your friend down they may be crossing the line from 'just teasing' to serious emotional abuse. Emotional control is as damaging as physical abuse. Look out for the following types of behaviour towards your friends: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Threats to break up</li> <li>• Anger and jealousy</li> <li>• Humiliation, manipulation or intimidation</li> <li>• Threats or actual self harm</li> </ul>
Sexual Abuse	We all know rape is a crime. Just as inexcusable is a partner pressuring, tricking, forcing or blackmailing your friend into sexual acts. Learning that someone you care about has been violated can be overwhelming. You might feel like there's nothing you can do but just showing you believe is a huge step. There are heaps of other things you can do to help your friend. Check the website for a step-by-step guide – www.stopviolence.com.au
